

PRESS CUTTINGS

The Times: Law
16 May 2006

Where there's a will

OLD SOLICITORS never die, they simply do it all over again. A couple of weeks ago I reported that Ronnie Fox, the founder of Fox Williams, has started afresh with his new firm, Fox. Now I see that Roger Lane-Smith, previously executive chairman of DLA Piper Rudnick, and Geoffrey Shindler, formerly the head of the trusts and estates department at Halliwells, have banded together to establish a niche outfit dedicated to trusts, estate planning and wills. These are lawyers with formidable names in their respective fields, likely to win work from firms that no longer cater for the private client. So look out for Lane-Smith & Shindler LLP — they're a bright, new, up-and-coming young firm.

edward.fennell@virgin.net